Draft: The Journal of Process is a biannual publication that explores the creative process through the lens of process art. Issue Three, published in 2023, delves into the themes of collaboration, experimentation, and the role of process in shaping artistic outcomes. This in-depth article provides an overview of the issue's content, featuring interviews with featured artists, essays on process art, and a behind-the-scenes look at the creative process behind Issue Three.

Interviews with Featured Artists

Issue Three of Draft features interviews with three artists whose work exemplifies the principles of process art:!

- Sarah Sze is a New York-based artist known for her large-scale installations that explore the relationship between space, time, and memory.
- Theaster Gates is a Chicago-based artist whose work incorporates found objects and recycled materials to create sculptures, installations, and social practice projects.
- Andrea Zittel is a California-based artist whose work investigates the intersection of art, design, and architecture.

These interviews offer insights into the artists' creative processes, their use of materials, and their thoughts on the role of process in their work.

Essays on Process Art

In addition to the artist interviews, Issue Three includes essays by leading scholars and critics on the topic of process art. These essays explore the history of process art, its relationship to other art movements, and its significance in contemporary art practice.

- "Process Art: A History" by art historian Amelia Jones traces the origins of process art from the early 20th century to the present day.
- "Process Art and Collaboration" by curator and writer Alison Gingeras examines the role of collaboration in process art, exploring how artists work together to create new and innovative forms of art.
- "The Creative Process: A Personal Perspective" by artist and educator Sarah Oppenheimer shares her own experiences with process art, offering insights into the challenges and rewards of working with this approach.

Behind-the-Scenes: The Creative Process of Issue Three

Draft: The Journal of Process Issue Three was created through a collaborative process that involved artists, writers, editors, and designers. This section provides a behind-the-scenes look at the creative process behind the issue, from the initial brainstorming sessions to the final layout and design.

The issue's theme, "Collaboration, Experimentation, and Process," was chosen to reflect the collaborative nature of the publication and the importance of experimentation in the creative process. The artists and writers featured in the issue were selected for their unique perspectives on process art and their willingness to share their insights with others.

The creative process for Issue Three began with a series of brainstorming sessions, in which the editorial team discussed possible themes, artists, and writers. Once the theme was finalized, the team began to reach out to potential contributors. The artists and writers who were selected for the issue were given freedom to develop their own projects, with the editorial team providing support and guidance throughout the process.

The final layout and design of Issue Three was created in close collaboration between the editorial team and the designers. The design team worked to create a visual aesthetic that complemented the content of the issue, while also making the publication accessible and user-friendly.

Draft: The Journal of Process Issue Three is a valuable resource for anyone interested in process art, collaboration, and the creative process. The issue's interviews with featured artists, essays by leading scholars and critics, and behind-the-scenes look at the creative process provide a comprehensive overview of this important and evolving art movement.

Whether you are an artist, a curator, a student, or simply someone who is interested in the creative process, Draft: The Journal of Process Issue Three is a must-read. This publication offers a unique and inspiring perspective on the art of our time.
