Whether you are dealing with students who are talking out of turn, refusing to work, or engaging in physical aggression, you will find research-based solutions in this article.

Talking Out of Turn

Talking out of turn is one of the most common classroom behavior problems. It can disrupt the flow of instruction and make it difficult for other students to learn. There are a number of strategies that teachers can use to address this behavior.

- Establish clear expectations. Make sure that students know when it is appropriate to talk and when it is not. This can be done through verbal instructions, written rules, or visual cues.
- Teach students how to raise their hands. This will help them to learn how to wait for their turn to speak.
- Provide opportunities for students to talk. Make sure that all students have a chance to participate in class discussions. This will help them to feel valued and respected, which can reduce the likelihood of them talking out of turn.
- Use positive reinforcement. Praise students when they raise their hands or wait their turn to speak.
- Use negative consequences. If students continue to talk out of turn, they may need to sit in a different seat, lose a privilege, or write a reflection.

Refusing to Work

Refusing to work is another common classroom behavior problem. This behavior can be frustrating for teachers and disruptive for the class. There are a number of strategies that teachers can use to address this behavior.

- Identify the cause of the behavior. Students may refuse to work for a variety of reasons, such as:

- They don't understand the work.
 - They are not interested in the work.
 - They are afraid of failing.
 - They are looking for attention.
- Address the cause of the behavior. Once you have identified the cause of the behavior, you can start to address it. For example, if a student is refusing to work because they don't understand the work, you can provide them with extra help. If a student is refusing to work because they are not interested in the work, you can find ways to make the work more engaging.
 - Set clear expectations. Make sure that students know what is expected of them and the consequences for not meeting those expectations.
 - Provide positive reinforcement. Praise students when they work hard and meet expectations.
 - Use negative consequences. If students continue to refuse to work, they may need to sit in a different seat, lose a privilege, or write a reflection.

Physical Aggression

Physical aggression is a serious classroom behavior problem. It can put students and staff at risk of injury. There are a number of strategies that teachers can use to address this behavior.

- Establish clear expectations. Make sure that students know that physical aggression is not acceptable and will not be tolerated.
- Teach students how to manage their anger. This can be done through:
 - Anger management groups
 - Counseling
 - Books and videos
- Provide opportunities for students to express their anger in a healthy way. This can be done through:
 - Physical activity
 - Drawing or painting
 - Writing in a journal
- Use positive reinforcement. Praise students when they manage their anger in a healthy way.
- Use negative consequences. If students continue to engage in physical aggression, they may need to be removed from the classroom, suspended, or expelled.

Classroom behavior problems can be a challenge, but they can be managed effectively with the right strategies. By using the research-based solutions outlined in this article, teachers can create a positive and productive learning environment for all students.
